

After some introductory classes on the characteristics of human thought, the angel trainee was led to a large chamber that held numerous visual displays. The mentor began assigning the trainees to various monitors. He took one trainee to a particular monitor and told him to watch that one carefully, as it represented the thoughts of a special thinker – one for whom creating stories and developing the thoughts that built them was a vital part of his being.

As the trainee watched the display, he could see tiny bubbles appearing and disappearing as though some event had (in human terms) boiled a small volume of water in a large tank<sup>1</sup>. The mentor explained that this was an illustration of the process of thought in the human mind. What was being shown at present was the manifestation of ordinary thoughts which did not have a great deal of weight or significance associated with them. These bubbles would randomly appear and wander around briefly until they just dissipated and re-integrated into the larger mass.

This looked to be a dull and boring job, the trainee thought, as he watched a glint here and there. But suddenly his gaze was transfixed, as he witnessed what he could only describe as a storm of bubble streaks flashing across the screen. It was as though his subject had experienced an explosion of thought. Even more interesting was the way that the streaks began to link together, creating even more streaks and channels in a type of chain reaction. The entire chamber began to radiate an increasing glow from all of this activity. The trainee called for the mentor's attention to bring him to witness this event and explain it to him.

The mentor said that the human was experiencing a series of interconnected thoughts that he was fitting together to build a story. These individual streaks were being woven together into an orderly and logical thought process which would help the person's understanding of some important principle with regard to the Great Good. The mentor went on to tell the angel that it was his job to help the human keep the conditions right in the chamber for developing these chains of thought. He reminded the trainee of his other duties in this regard.

The trainees had all been instructed concerning their duties: they were to facilitate and assist the humans in their thought processes. This involved watching for the creation of bubble tracks, helping keep the conditions in the chamber right for production, helping guide the human thought to clarity, helping keep the overall brightness of the display up (the humans had dark thoughts, too), helping to fit thoughts together, and last but not least, helping the subjects to remember or capture thoughts that occurred during times of distraction and were potentially lost.

The trainee was warned about the Adversary, too, and the many ways that he inserted his own ideas into the chamber. The trainee had tools to help block him out (he could insert thoughts, too), but he could only facilitate the human's own desire to do this.

There was a certain fascination in the bubble lines as they grew and spawned others to create a web of structure that represented a complete story idea. The trainee could see the strength in the connections, and in the symmetry of the figure that was essentially a network map. The angel had to admit a degree of awe at what the subject had created, as he came to understand the truth that had been realized.

Once the story idea had matured, the man began to finalize it and store it on paper so that the thoughts would not be lost. But there was also an internal storage that occurred in the lasting structure of his soul. The story became another brick in the walls that solidified the temple and kingdom that the Master wanted and that indeed was best for that soul.

The trainee stepped back from the display and thought about what he had seen and learned from these bubble, or thought tracks. Then he considered the kind of bubbles that the Creator must have made when he thought the human's universe into existence. He realized that it was more than he could ever understand, so he decided he had better take a break and think about something less overwhelmingly powerful.

1. consider the use of bubble or cloud chambers to track high-energy particles

© Copyright 2017, Heard Lowry.

---

How Humans think: Thinking of thoughts that flash through our brains as a particle through a cloud or bubble chamber;

non-significant thoughts are either not seen or only create a bubble or two Monitoring thoughts; watching a glint here and there; and then...

angel: Wow! What was that? And then more and more, like meteors flashing across the sky; more and more linking together; chain reaction lightning fashions; hailstorm; a storm of explosion of thought (but not destructive) streaks all of the way across the chambers

The angel mentor telling the angel to help keep the conditions right for continuing the thought

AM: telling the angel to watch in amazement as the story (or line of logical thought) is woven together from the individual pieces; building the story

The adversary inserts thoughts too; try to block him out, facilitating the human's own desire (can't just block without their buy-in) trying to consider how these are captured; trying to recapture one that fired through, and got "lost" because of distraction helping to recover a "lost" thought

Preparing the Thought Chamber

Analysis: thinking of the preparation of the exact conditions needed for the track – a Spirit-aided parallel to our preparing our minds for thoughts;

Story Development

The feeling of a great thought – strength in the connections

The line of bubbles lingers and grows; they spawn others; "decay"; chain reaction of thought leads to a story

Storage

Construction is stored (on paper, in conversation); and the thought is not lost...

storage of completed ideas helps build lasting structure to become what the master wants and what is best for the soul

imprinted deep within soul; helping us minister to others

Completion – maturity of ideas

God

think of the storm of thoughts that represent God; fury / tempest; fading out the creation of the bubbles (thinking that God created the universe by his thoughts);

Creation

Multiverse

What would the symbolism for good or bad thoughts be?

Going off the track with no sense of direction; no purpose
a storm of explosion of thought (but not destructive)