

We recently have returned from a place known for its rainbows. Soozie and I saw several, but on the last day, Soozie really wanted to see one last one. She kept trying to “pull” one out of the mist, but was disappointed. When we got to the airport, we got to our gate, sat down, and suddenly Soozie cried, “Rainbow!” It was a full arc, but the window of the airport was so dirty that we couldn’t get a good picture. There was so much dust blowing around that we actually saw someone from inside the plane open the cockpit window and try to clean the pilot’s side.

The dirt on our windows prevented us from seeing the full glory of the rainbow. We all have to periodically clean our glasses and windows. It strikes me that this communion is an opportunity to clear our screens to better view the complete glory of Christ.

The contribution will not be applied to clean the windows at that airport, but will hopefully be applied to help someone closer to home see the beauty of Christ.
