

One of the most interesting miracles that Jesus performed was when He walked on the water, and allowed Peter to do the same. It was such a profound moment that none of the other apostles even thought about trying it, but Jesus could have had them all hovering above the sea if it had been His will. Even when Peter began to doubt, Jesus could have kept him from sinking into the sea.

We might think that in a similar way He can keep us all from sinking into something much worse. Through His power we are kept separate from the stain of sin and out of the grasp of its consequences. Like Peter, we may lose sight of that power momentarily, but we are firmly in His embrace and there is nothing that can separate us from Him.

We celebrate that grace in remembering His sacrifice, both in body and blood.
